Active Voice vs. Passive Voice

Active voice occurs when the subject of a sentence is acting. The subject can be thought of as the active actor of the sentence. This is accomplished by using verbs that express action emphatically and vigorously. Carefully selected verbs can bring energy to a piece of writing. The active voice is most interesting to the reader and is often preferred by instructors.

Examples: Hurricane Katrina destroyed many homes and businesses.

JCCC students painted the mural on the college campus.

Passive voice occurs when the subject of a sentence is being acted upon. This is accomplished by using a form of the be verb (be, am, is, was, were, being, been) with the past participle of the main verb. When a subject receives the action instead of doing it, the subject lacks strength. The passive voice does have its place, for example in scientific writing.

Examples: Many homes and businesses were destroyed by Hurricane Katrina.

The mural on the college campus was painted by JCCC students.

While in the process of writing a first draft, using passive voice without realizing it is very common. The writer may initially be more focused on getting the content down on paper and less concerned about sentence style. With revision, the writer can change sentences from the passive voice to the active voice.

Examples: The bone was devoured by the hungry dog. (passive)

The hungry dog devoured the bone. (active)
The Battle of Waterloo was lost by Napoleon.  (passive)

subject

be verb + past participle

Napoleon lost the Battle of Waterloo.  (active)

subject

active verb

Bad social environments are caused by the violence in nature.  (passive)

subject

be verb + past participle

Violence in nature causes bad social environments.  (active)

subject

active verb

Betty was followed by us up and down the subway stairs of New York.  (passive)

subject

be verb + past participle

We followed Betty up and down the subway stairs of New York.  (active)

subject

active verb

When the writer intentionally wishes to emphasize the receiver of the action OR minimize the importance of the actor, the passive is appropriate.

Examples: Many Aborigines of Australia have been forced off their lands by colonizing conquerors.

subject

have + be verb + past participle

• Here the writer wishes to emphasize the receiver (Many Aborigines of Australia) of the action (have been forced).

Early in the growing season, the crop is sprayed with a pesticide to resist damaging insects.

subject

be verb + past participle

• Here the writer wishes to emphasize the crop being sprayed with a pesticide, not those doing the spraying (a possible subject for this sentence).

These are the basic suggestions for active & passive voice; for more complex concepts, please see Writing Center staff or several handbooks available in the JCCC Writing Center.

For exercises to practice your active voice vs. passive voice skills, please see Writing Center staff.

Johnson County Community College Writing Center – active voice vs. passive voice handout 12.12.12 bkr