Creating Teaching Moments for Difficult Children

How does it feel when children throw tantrums, don’t clean up and treat others unfairly? It doesn’t feel good and we often label these children as troublemakers. Find out how to connect the pieces of showing children love and seeing the child as a worthy person who just made a mistake. Learn to figure out what goal their behavior has and how to talk to them to get their needs met. When you discover how to do this, you will have helpful skills to use to modify their behavior.

Oops! That’s Not Right! Helping Young Children Learn to Write

Do you ever wonder if young children can write in decipherable ways, or if children have the muscle control necessary to write letters, as well as their name? Learn what children must be able to do before they will be able to write. Find ideas for activities that will help them develop perceptual and visual skills, and learn about interesting activities that will help develop the muscles in their hands, fingers and wrists.
